George Orwell's Animal Farm paints an imaginary world where Society is as cruel and unpleasant as possible. The plot weaves a tale of equality and takes the readers to Mr. Jones' Manor Farm, where animals dream of achieving complete freedom from the tyranny of their human masters.

Traversing from the animal philosophy of equality to the gradual rise of an animal revolution, the novel ends with the renaming of Manor farm to Animal farm and back again to Manor farm.

Objective- To show how power can corrupt leaders and how revolutions meant to bring equality can end up creating new forms of oppression. It's a warning about how easily ideals can be betrayed when those in charge became selfish.

One of the most famous and impactful lines from "Animal Farm" is - All animals are equal, but some animals are more equal than others.

It means that even though everyone should be treated equally, in reality, some people are given special treatment, and more powers than others and it highlights the hypocrisy and unfairness that can happen when those in power manipulate the rules for their own benefit.
